From the President's Pen

It's been another busy month and I'm sure you've been hearing the buzz about the unveiling of our new website. Starting May 15, when you go to BrockHouseSociety.com, you'll see a lovely a vastly improved home page. Take a while to familiarize yourself with it and more from the perspective of a non-member. When you're ready, log-in (instructions will come to you in an email) and explore as a member.

For our generation, a change in the way we use technology may not always be as exciting as it is for the younger folk. I can assure, though, Laurie Wilmot (Information Systems) and Michael Le Bas (Marketing, including internal communications) have given that considerable thought. The potential is significant and it will take all of us time to tap it.

Volunteers are already using the new platform and Michael is preparing detailed information for everyone including the how-tos and many benefits of this management system. You can get support from the office, your fellow members and even ClubExpress. You'll see a small "contact us" at the bottom of each page. (Or, Home>About>Contact Us).

Thank you Laurie for your no fuss, can-do attitude and clarity. Thank you Michael for supporting Laurie and for overseeing our branding project that will ensure drawing-power and consistency. Thank you to Deborah Bush for an untold amount of behind-the-scenes work. Thank you Sophie for your seemingly tireless efforts to make this enterprise a reality. Thank you Vera for supporting us all everyday in a myriad of ways.

By the way, if you haven't seen or heard the remarkable jazz singer, Ms. Helen Hansen, before - May 9 is your golden opportunity (see cover page). Ask any of us who know her work. We'll rave about it.

See you around the House!

Sailing Alone Around the World

by
Joshua Slocum

You'd like Joshua Slocum even if, like me, you don't know a poop deck from a head.

He was born in Nova Scotia of a seafaring family, and 16 years old when "life found me before the mast in a full-rigged ship, thus I came 'over the bow' and not in through the cabin windows, in 1895, to the command of a ship".

51 years old and wondering what to do with the rest of his life, he was given a decaying oyster boat almost as a joke, and promptly began rebuilding the sloop from the timbers up with a little help from his friends, renaming the vessel Spray. The details of the renaissance get a bit tedious, but he ended up with a boat thirty-six feet, nine inches long and fourteen feet, two inches wide - not as big as his last ownership, judged the "finest American sailing vessel afloat, but the Spray apparently sat on water like a swan: Slocum was on his way, returning three years and two months later, having sailed 46,000 miles around the world. One gathers he wasn't much of a family man.

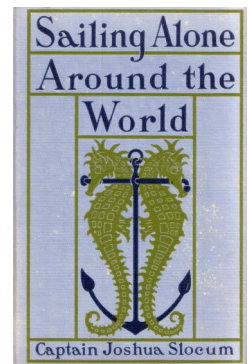

It must have been lonely at times - near Samoa he mentions in the log he kept daily that "being in a bleak land is no place to enjoy solitude", and in several areas he was stalked by natives, always referred to as savages, who often seemed to presage violent storms called williwaws, at times lasting some 30 hours. Then again, he sometimes dropped anchor in water 30 feet deep, a brilliant clear blue all the way down. He had a legitimate fear of "savages", who actually were small-scale pirates, not known for tossing out the welcome mat unless an unhappy sailor was in it. At times

Slocum changed his clothing three times in rapid succession in a successful attempt to fool the pirates that there was more than one man on board: at one point a friend gave him a box of tacks and told him to scatter them on the deck at night, the shoeless brigands "howled like banshees".

Slocum's voyage was really a small miracle, and his book describing the voyage has never been out of print: there are societies scattered around the world that keep his memory alive today. He met sailors and governors, Stanley of Livingstone fame, and Robert Louis Stevenson's widow. He died as he lived, sailing alone somewhere in the West Indies, where he was run over by a steamer.

Or so they say.

Food Services

New Members!

An opportunity to get your feet wet in volunteering at Brock House Society will be coming up on July 8 at our Summer Fair! Many different jobs will be available, but Food Services require at least 35 volunteers. It's only a 2-hour stint, and when you are finished, you can meet someone for lunch or resume shopping at the different centres. It's a fun day!

Food services is always looking for volunteers for our On-Call list. As members go on holiday or become ill, we need substitutes to take over. This is an easy way to get into the flow of activities at Brock House Society.

READING CANADIAN LITERATURE PROGRAM

The Brock House Orchestra

The orchestra is enjoying our usual busy spring, following a successful February playout at Kerrisdale Seniors Centre. On April 21, we played at St. Vincent's Langara, and we look forward to playing May 8 at Southview Terrace. Plans are also in the works for a June playout jointly with the Elgar Strings, again at Kerrisdale Seniors Centre. We are so glad that Jeffrey Tseng is available to conduct us.

Recently we welcomed Steve Potter, clarinet, to our orchestra, and we are happily bursting at the seams in the Begg room, where we will nevertheless welcome musically minded newcomers with their instruments. Look for us most Wednesday mornings at 10:00 a.m. in the above mentioned room, where we practice until noon, including a nice coffee break.

Brock House Cycling Group

Time to pump up the tires and get our weekly ride going again.

Usually once a week, several members meet to go cycling together. We sometimes begin at Brock, more often from another location. Rides are typically Tuesday or Wednesday morning. The destination is often a lunch location.

Rides are mostly 25K with only a few hundred feet vertical. Brock House to Coal Harbour via Lost Lagoon is one of our popular rides. Another is the West Richmond Dyke to Steveston starting at the Olympic Oval.

Our style of riding is weather dependent. In order to maintain flexibility in all aspects, primary communication of planned rides is by e-mail to those members who have expressed an interest. When the timing is right, we also post rides in the Weekly Update.

To join the e-mail list please e-mail the Convener, Frank Jameson, at

Regulators cast critical eye on Canadian travel insurance industry

Many travel insurance policies are sold in Canada without proper medical questionnaires and with dozens of pages of complicated jargon, potentially leaving policy holders with no coverage, according to an insurance regulators' issues report obtained by Postmedia News.

"Current practices do not appear to meet this objective (of providing enough information for consumers to make an informed choice about policies) and, as such, do not treat customers fairly," states the issues report prepared by a working group of the Canadian Council of Insurance Regulators, which includes B.C.'s Financial Institutions Commission.

Based on this report, the group is preparing recommendations for Canadian travel insurance providers to clean up their industry after finding cases of what could be unfair practices.

Chris Carter, deputy superintendent of supervision at FICOM, told Postmedia News in an emailed response that "FICOM is actively working with other regulators in Canada to address consumer concerns about travel insurance products sold locally and nationally."

The working group's recommendations, if approved, would affect travel insurance sold for out-of-country travel in B.C. and across Canada.

The issues report listed a string of problems with travel insurance, including that 95 per cent of applicants were being automatically approved for policies without the insurer determining whether their medical conditions would exclude any eventual claim.

"The working group considers this to be an exceedingly high automatic acceptance rate and is surprised so few applicants have to undergo medical examinations during the underwriting process," unlike with applicants for health and life insurance. The automatic acceptance, "may give a false sense of security among consumers or create unrealistic expectations," the report stated.

That would leave the consumer, who the report noted is often in a rush to get a policy before a trip, to choose the coverage and to determine whether they had a pre-existing medical condition. They would be left to read through lengthy policies with "medical questions that are too complicated for even medical experts to understand," the report said.

Also, the premiums are based on the duration and value of the trip and the applicant's age, rather than their medical condition, the report noted.

One of the examples the paper gave was of a young, healthy man who answered no when asked if he had a prior medical condition. But two months before taking out the policy, he had gone to his doctor complaining of pressure in his chest. His doctor performed tests and concluded it was likely due to stress.

The man was denied coverage for a bike accident on his trip because under the terms of his contract, he should have answered yes. His insurer ruled that he wasn't eligible for the insurance in the first place because he had answered the question improperly.

Another example the report cited was a woman who was offered a choice of 15 different plans, with disclosure documents that ran 85 pages.

"The working group observed that the documents are often too difficult for the average consumer to read and understand," the report said. "Insurers should carry out a diligent review of their (travel insurance) products to ensure they're providing proper coverage to consumers."

Carter said that regulators are also considering recommendations to ensure the travel insurance industry discloses to consumers the internal process for making a complaint about a claim and to ensure that unhappy consumers can take their case to an ombudsperson or FICOM.

The recommendations are also expected to address "potential issues with product design, marketing and sales, involvement of third-party service providers, claims management, complaints, education and data collection," according to the report.

Consumers can contact FICOM with complaints about travel insurance before the recommendations are drafted. They are expected later this year, said Carter.

Travel Plans

I have been in many places, but I've never been in Kahoots. Apparently, you can't go alone. You have to be in Kahoots with someone.

I've also never been in Cognito. I hear no one recognizes you there.

I have, however, been in Sane. They don't have an airport; you have to be driven there. I have made several trips there, thanks to my children, friends, family, and work.

I would like to go to Conclusions, but you have to jump, and I'm not too much on physical activity anymore.

I have also been in Doubt. That is a sad place to go, and I try not to visit there too often.

I've been in Flexible, but only when it was very important to stand firm.

Sometimes I'm in Capable, and I go there more often as I'm getting older.

One of my favorite places to be is in Suspense! It really gets the adrenalin flowing and pumps up the old heart! At my age I need all the stimuli I can get!

I may have been in Continent, but I don't remember what country I was in. It's an age thing. They tell me it is very wet and damp there.

PLEASE DO YOUR PART!

You can do your bit by remembering to give this to at least one unstable person. My job is done!

Life is too short for negative drama and petty things. So laugh insanely, love truly and I hope everyone is happy in your head - we're all doing pretty well in mine!

Agamemnon

by

Ken McTaggart

We traveled south, past drab Mycenae's hill,

And through a grove of dusty olive trees.

"Stop the car now!" she screamed, and on the verge

She tore off all her clothes. My fantasies

Of roadside passion quickly died, "Bedbugs"

She sobbed, and turned her red-flecked flank to me.

"Take all my clothes, examine hem and seam,

Then beat them hard against that olive tree."

Back in the car, I said "Consider this:

Although bedbug bites bring one little joy,

An ancestor of your bed-guests fed on

Agamemnon as he set out for Troy."

Silence rewarded my attempt to cheer,

Not a word 'til Tiryns' ruins were near.

Workshop News

The skilled woodworkers in the Brock House workshop craft a variety of new and novel products from a variety of interesting wood. Despite this interest in unique work, many of the workers will assist Brock House members that need to have boards cut or shaped for personal projects in their homes such as shelves or picture frames, drill holes in ceramic plates to make clock faces or even cut slots in the lids to make piggy banks from jars. They have also undertaken repairs of family treasures and children's toys. For example, Allan was recently asked to mend the broken wooden axel holding the wheel on a child wooden push cart. To eliminate future problems and children's frustration he replaced all of the weak dowels with strong bolts. In addition, he has rebuilt wobbly chairs that were broken when people tripped over them or sat down too hard. He has also tightened legs on small tables and rebuilt sagging dresser drawers. Other workers have lengthened worn down canes, refinished tables and repaired jewelry boxes. If your favorite heirloom chairs or tables are getting a bit wobbly or your children's favorite wooden toys could benefit from custom repairs, and you want us to consider taking on the project please contact the Workshop Coordinator at the Brock House workshop on Thursday morning or e-mail wramey@interchange.ubc.ca with "Brock House Projects" in the subject line.
